

PREFACE

The Europa Universalis series, the heart of Paradox Interactive, describes the transformative period starting with the renaissance leading up to the industrialization and the violent transformations of Napoleon Bonaparte.

A new civilization arose in Europe that would come to lead and conquer the rest of the world, a civilization that made unparalleled strides in science, politics, industry and warfare. Throughout this period, a series of works was created that in many cases has come to symbolize this change, books like Systema Naturae by Carl von Linné, Leviathan by Thomas Hobbes and this book, The Wealth of Nations (or rather, An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations) by Adam Smith.

Adam Smith was in many ways the classic 18th century scholar, a child of the new and rising upper middle class and part of the Scottish Enlightenment. As so many of his peers, he was highly educated, politically liberal and with an almost unquenchable thirst for knowledge. What set Adam Smith apart was his main area of study, economics, and the great strides he made in the area.

In modern days Adam Smith is often seen as a poster child for more liberal (in the European sense) economics and a favorite of the right. However, his contributions are in many ways universal and maybe strongest seen as a symbol of one of the greatest changes of era, the rise of capitalism.

At the onset of Europa Universalis IV the feudal societies of Europe are in their death-throes as the age of chivalry is coming to an end and stronger central governments tighten their grip over the continent. Armies are nationalized and education is becoming more widespread via book printing and public schools. The old nobility is slowly losing ground.

Instead, a new class is growing; traders, professionals and craftsman who, under the protection of the stronger governments, create wealth and knowledge to an extent never seen before. These were men that worked under concepts such as contracts, professionalism, the right to choose and the value of accomplishments, as opposed to the nobility's focus on faith, honor and martial capabilities.

The Wealth of Nations, together with its sister-book, The Theory Moral Sentiments, describes these new views and morals better than any book before it. No longer is man guided by honor nor faith, but by simple incentives where egoism lies at the core. Wealth is not created by the grace of God, but by millions of men (women are rarely mentioned) driven by the will to make money, that together create the Invisible Hand and the balance it gives the system.

This change is one of the most fundamental in history, in the effects it has on our everyday life. It laid the foundation for not only the modern corporation and the wealth we now take for granted, but also made the salaried worker the standard citizen.

The Wealth of Nations is the original manifesto of the capitalistic system we live and work in, a book that stands a true testament of the power of ideas, but it is also a great read written by an unusually sympathetic writer, and can be read in its own right as just a good old read.

INTRODUCTION AND PLAN OF THE WORK.

The annual labour of every nation is the fund which originally supplies it with all the necessaries and conveniences of life which it annually consumes, and which consist always either in the immediate produce of that labour, or in what is purchased with that produce from other nations.

According, therefore, as this produce, or what is purchased with it, bears a greater or smaller proportion to the number of those who are to consume it, the nation will be better or worse supplied with all the necessaries and conveniences for which it has occasion.

But this proportion must in every nation be regulated by two different circumstances: first, by the skill, dexterity, and judgment with which its labour is generally applied; and, secondly, by the proportion between the number of those who are employed in useful labour, and that of those who are not so employed. Whatever be the soil, climate, or extent of territory of any particular nation, the abundance or scantiness of its annual supply must, in that particular situation, depend upon those two circumstances.

The abundance or scantiness of this supply, too, seems to depend more upon the former of those two circumstances than upon the latter. Among the savage nations of hunters and fishers, every individual who is able to work is more or less employed in useful labour, and endeavours to provide, as well as he can, the necessaries and conveniences of life, for himself, and such of his family or tribe as are either too old, or too young, or too infirm, to go a-hunting and fishing. Such nations, however, are so miserably poor, that, from mere want, they are frequently reduced, or at least think themselves reduced, to the necessity sometimes of directly destroying, and sometimes of
